

Bailey Wong

Bailey Wong studies urban and regional planning with an emphasis on social justice and community development at Cal Poly Pomona's College of Environmental Design. Bailey is a native of the South Bay, born at Torrance Memorial Medical Center and raised in Redondo Beach. Her experience includes work in transportation, housing and land use. As an intern with Eco Rapid Transit, Bailey created the agency's alignment maps, and as an intern with SAJE, Strategic Action for a Just Economy, she researched and compiled a database of vacant public-owned properties throughout the city of Los Angeles.

Set to graduate in May 2023, Bailey works part-time as a project coordinator for Murakawa Communications, a local communications firm working on projects in water and the built environment.

#

Potential Questions for Bailey Wong – Youth Panel

1. How can cities and local agencies prepare the public for what's coming to ensure water reliability, get to zero waste and create more housing in an area that is built out?
2. What are the differences you notice between your generation and older generations in terms of awareness of climate change and everyday behaviors?

#